

For my appeal to the government which I know is not listening but might as well pee into the ocean, is that the government and big business already has too big of a say what content we see and don't see. To allow business now to alter their internet quality based on deals, or not liking a particular site is a dangerous precedent. We already are one of the most watched and spied upon people in the history of the world and now they can control how much access we have to certain sites, it is ridiculous. I know that no one will probably read this because D.C. is about helping Wall Street and whatever, but the internet is one of the last free places, do not take this away.
